A must read for any elementary educator I ve just finished a review copy of this e book by a Canadian teacher from Saskatchewan named Kathy Cassidy I m really impressed While there s tonnes in here for teachers, I think it would also be a great read resource for parents not only in terms of understanding what kinds of technologies might be appropriate for younger children to be learning with and why they might be using them in schools, but also for those parents who want to engage their children in connecting with the world from home, whether home schoolers or just avid connected learners I love that this e book was created in such an interactive manner the format of the book really lends itself to providing the reader with a window into Cassidy s classroom and makes the learning inside visible For example, you can watch videos of Grade One students working on numeracy concepts by stacking Oreos, talking about what they are doing and what they have learned, and then read comments left on their blog by others who watched It really takes full advantage of the digital media format The writing is authentic, engaging and very practical, explaining such things as how to share with parents what is possible, how to proceed with blogging with primary students in a way that is both safe and effective etc There s so much I d highly recommend this to anyone interested in seeing and learning how to use technology to make learning transparent, authentic and connected for early years students and others.
