Now, the little girl was not stupid and she first went to her own aunt for advice Good morrow Auntie, she said Mother has sent me to her sister for a needle and thread to sew me a blouse What should I do The aunt told her what to do My dear niece, she said You will find a birch tree there that will lash your face you must tie it with a ribbon You will find gates that will creak and bang you must pour oil on the hinges You will find dogs that will try to rip you apart you must throw them fresh rolls You will find a cat that will try to scratch your eyes out you must give her some ham The little girl went off, walked and walked and finally came to the witch s abode. There stood a hut, and inside sat Baba Yaga, the bony witch, spinning Good day Auntie, said the little girl Good day, dearie, the witch replied Mother sent me for a needle and thread to sew me a blouse, said the girl Very well, Baba Yaga said Sit down and weave The girl sat at the loom then Baba Yaga went out and told her serving maid, Go and heat up the bath house and give my niece a good wash I want to eat her for breakfast The serving maid did as she was bid and the poor little girl sat there half dead with fright, begging, Oh, please, dear serving maid, don't burn the wood, pour water on instead, and carry the water in a sieve And she gave the maid a kerchief. Meanwhile Baba Yaga was waiting she went to the window and asked, Are you weaving, dear niece Are you weaving, my dear I'm weaving, Auntie, the girl replied, I'm weaving, my dear When Baba Yaga moved away from the window, the little girl gave some ham to the cat and asked her whether there was any escape At once the cat replied, Here is a comb and towel Take them and run away Baba Yaga will chase you put your ear to the ground and, when you hear her coming, throw down the towel and a wide, wide river will appear And if she crosses the river and starts to catch you up, put your ear to the ground again and, when you hear her coming close, throw down your comb and a dense forest will appear She won't be able to get through that The little girl took the towel and comb and ran As she ran from the house, the dogs tried to tear her to pieces, but she tossed them the fresh rolls and they let her pass The gates tried to bang shut, but she poured some oil on the hinges, and they let her through The birch tree tried to lash her face, but she tied it with a ribbon, and it let her pass In the meantime, the cat sat down at the loom to weave though, truth to tell, she tangled it all up instead Now and then Baba Yaga would come to the window and call, Are you weaving, dear niece Are you weaving, my dear And the cat would answer in a low voice, I'm weaving Auntie I'm weaving, my dear The witch rushed into the hut and saw that the girl was gone She gave the cat a good beating and scolded her for not scratching out the girl's eyes But the cat answered her, I've served you for years, yet you've never even given me a bone, but she gave me some ham Baba Yaga then turned on the dogs, the gates, the birch tree and the serving maid, and set to thrashing and scolding them all But the dogs said to her, We've served you for years, yet you've never even thrown us a burnt crust, but she gave us fresh rolls And the gates said, We've served you for years, yet you've never even poured water on our hinges, but she oiled them for us And the birch tree said, I've served you for years, yet you've never even tied me up with thread, but she tied me with a ribbon And the serving maid said, I've served you for years, yet you've never even given me a rag, but she gave me a kerchief.
