Victoria Bishop is an ordinary girl living with her father. Victoria's father leaves her with a deed to a house in Louisiana and a whole lot of mystery. Then Victoria goes to this town where the people in it immediately take a dislike to her because of something that happened in the past. There, Victoria meets Sheriff Ian Montague. Ian is so startled that Victoria is not dead like the town believes that he tells her right off that she should go back to where she came from. Victoria doesn't care what the sheriff wants and stays in the town. The people in the town are distraught that she would come back after what they believe her father did. They believe that Vicky's father is a murderer and a thief. Ian wants to protect her from all the people in the town but he doesn't know how to do that unless he makes her leave. But his emotions get the better of him and he ends up falling in love with Victoria Bishop. Try as Ian might, he doesn't succeed in turning away from her. Even when Victoria goes to meet her father's attorney to tell her the truth about what really happened that long ago day, only he doesn't turn up, so Ian and Victoria go and see the sights in New Orleans. Victoria manages to lose Ian in the crush of the festival and Ian finds Victoria getting her palm read. Victoria challenges him to get his palm read and he does only to have some of his secrets spilled by the palm reader. Victoria is immediately consumed with guilt over having Ian do that because now she sees how distant he is. Ian separates from her, so she goes and tries to find a gun to protect herself with. Ian finds out and corners her in the shop, Ian then volunteers to teach her how to shoot. But Ian sees that he has been deceived and leaves her there.

Unique storyline Good overall I m not sure if it is just me, but I feel there was a great overuse of a word Halfway through I had to look up the definition to see if I remembered it right This is a good read
