RE Contract to Love Kate Proctor continues the martyred h trope for June of 1994, but she gives us a really great dog bonus with an adorably inquisitive and very doggily dashing Golden Retriever named Flynn which is about the only thing that redeems the surly, slime sipping nematode H, cause Flynn is his dog and if Flynn likes him he can t be all that bad I think Anyhows, our sweet little TSTL h is a personnel officer at the H s huge, gigantic mega corporation company the H s grandmother, who used to be engaged to the h s grandfather before she dumped him and married the H s grandfather felt that the h s family had been greatly financially wronged in the feud between the two men 30 years earlier, so she left the h half of everything when she died.The h and H have a bit of history The h was only 19 and using a different last name than her grandfather s when she went to interview for jobs She was offered three different ones, but the H s company paid the most and had the best prospects, so she went to work there.That is her official story and she is sticking to it, but really she met the H in the elevator and fell head over heels for his boorish tycoon charms and so she worked there for six years and even got in a roofie kiss under the mistletoe at a company Christmas party one year, before she got news of her big inheritance.The H is of course furious over the whole situation and calls the h a jumped up little typist , which is about the mildest terms he uses Nevertheless, the h finds herself without a flat, so she moves into her half of the H s family home Flynn is delighted to see her, even tho the H s lady buffet samples are not, and good times are had as the h and Flynn make friends The H throws in major roofie kisses anytime the h disagrees with him, while vowing to make her life miserable The h also stupidly agrees to redo his kitchen and slave over a hot stove for him, as his domestic staff have pretty much abandoned him due to the unfinished state of his kitchen

We also get told of an endless parade of the H's lady buffet samples stopping over, sometimes the h even makes them tea. In between the roofie kissing moments, the H is an utter toe rag, as HP H's are wont to be. The h, whose human BFF is her secretary, has to deal with a toxic employee and the H does little to back her up even tho the staff of the woman's area are continually quitting because she is so awful. We find out later that the woman's cousin is the H's OW. Even tho the h eventually allows her self to be bullied into signing over control of her executive share powers to the H to keep her from interfering in the company's management, he still thinks she is out to sabotage him. Mainly cause in the middle of one of his regularly scheduled beratements of the h, she threatens to expose his nastiness to the press. Eventually the H and h become lovers, but the H is still slurping up nematode slime sewage whenever he gets the chance. He shacks up with the OW on a supposed business trip and taunts the h that he will sleep with someone else on a regular basis. The only respite from the whole tawdry scenario is Flynn, who doesn't like people being upset or angry tones of voices from his people, so he gets his little teddy bear and cuddles it and the h. The H also tells the h that she will walk away rather than continue to be humiliated once he has had his fill of sleeping with her and he will get his home and his business back. The h is infected with Treacherous Body Syndrome tho, and can't bring herself to dump the H. There is a little investigation into the H's grandmother's diaries about the big feud and essentially it boils down to everyone being huge slime slurper blobfish pustules and behaving badly. When a news article appears that purports to be direct quotes from the h about how she will be making changes at the company, irregardless of the H and his policies, the H loses his mind and goes ballistic. There is a big fight and then angry lurve clubbings which happen off page. In fact a big problem with this book, as with the last KP book, is too much happens off page and is told in a conversation in retrospect, so we don't see the events as they happen and it leads to a really boring middle six chapters of the book. The h finally picks herself off the floor and quits her job and goes off on her own to find a way to remove the track marks running down her back. Her old work BFF then berates her for not calling her for two weeks after she left and continues her mission to pimp the h out to the H by bringing the H to the BFF h reunion at a local cafe. The H, who knows he really doesn't deserve another chance, sends Flynn in to go lay adoringly on the h's feet and entice the h back to the H's house. Really the H had no choice, cause Flynn ran away in protest over the h's leaving and it took the H all day to find him. Back at the H's house, we find out that the h's problem worker cousin of the H's OW, whom he supposedly did NOT sleep with on his business trip, she was just at the same place he was at the same time and he had priorly said she could use his place there, was eavesdropping on the H and h and her conversations with the work BFF and made up a bunch of quotes to give to the newspapers. The H finally fired the problem cousin and then pined and lost weight when the h walked out on him. He says he plans to give the house over to the h, but she doesn't want it. The H claims he loves her and is sorry for being so horrible, but he really wants her to marry him. The h finally realizes that the only way she is ever going to get full guardianship of Flynn is to marry the H and hopefully arrange for a fatal accident, okay, I made up the fatal accident part, but she says she loves the H back and we leave the h drinking the Kool Aid and planning the wedding for another dubious HEA. Flynn saved this book, his doggie style was great and he was very lovable. The h was okay, her BFF and her pimp out moves needed a toilet seat to the head and the H probably should have been flushed back down the sewer pipe. The H supposedly has this tragic childhood to explain all of his nematodeness, but really, it was very mediocre and combined with the big denouements all happening off page well you could do better for an HP outing.

I had to admit at times I found this book terribly boring but it shaped up okay The hero and heroine were both left half a house and business in a will The hero did his best to get the heroine out of the house and business only to fall in love with her and accuse her of many corrupt things when she didn't do it When the heroine was confronted her heart was broken as she'd been in love with the hero since she was nineteen So the heroine left, only for the hero to find out he'd been wrong about her and begged profusely to have her back.
